

Sinclair Broadcasting's move to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair's move should be stopped or tempered with anti-Bush material to counter its effects. This kind of broadcasting either sways voters or serves to alienate them from the media.

I am a reporter and these obvious corporate forays into democratic affairs affect my livelihood. People no longer trust and respect the media, and though I am in print, they view us as the same entity.

I really wish the FCC would reconsider the rules that allow corporate media to bulk buy media outlets.

These airwaves are public and activity on them should be in the public interest.

Please stop companies like Sinclair from ruining the reputation of hardworking media representatives like myself.
